Well, president, it was P-day ...

Cougar basketball star Danny Ainge shows off a unique get-well message he received Tuesday from unusual group of fans — the missionaries in the Missionary Training Center. The letter reads, Be it known unto all players, coaches, students and fans, that the missionaries in the MTC extend their best wishes and hopes in behalf of Danny Ainge, a great player and a great missionary tool. We wish you a quick and lasting recovery. (We need your knees!) Good luck Thursday and throughout the playoffs.

Ainge said Tuesday night the get-well card was hand-signed by several thousand missionaries.

Oil prices hold steady

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iraq, the world's No. 2 petroleum exporter, and Mexico joined Saudi Arabia Tuesday in refusing to increase crude oil prices to take advantage of the halt in Iran's oil production. Iran said it will resume exports and auction its oil to the highest bidder.

In Washington, President Carter said in a broadcast news conference that "the situation with supply and pricing is serious, but not critical." The Carter administration Tuesday made public, standby plans to limit gasoline use through possible rationing and other conservation measures. But, Carter said, he has no current plan to resort to use of the plans. "We don't have any present intention of implementing any of those measures," he said.

The conservation plans, which will be sent to Congress on Thursday and which could be used only in an energy emergency, include calls for limiting service-station hours on weekends, restricting temperatures in commercial buildings and cutting unnecessary advertising lighting.

Because the United States has no control over such price increases, such as the one Venezuela recently announced, Carter said, the best approach is to "reduce exhorbitant waste" and to "increase productivity within our nation."

Despite the loss of oil from Iran and the price increases imposed by petroleum exporting nations, the president said, the United States has no desire to place American troops in Saudi Arabia.

In Baghdad, Tayeh Abdul Karim, the Iraqi oil minister, said that while his government "is against freezing oil prices in normal conditions and seeks fair price increases, it is opposed to the imposition of extraordinary rises in extraordinary conditions."

Iraq supplies about 4.9 percent of the non-communist world's oil and is second only to Saudi Arabia as an oil exporter. It is seen as a radical among members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

And Mexico, which is not an OPEC member, but is becoming a major oil producer, said it would not match the independent OPEC increases.

"We are maintaining our contracts and prices specified in them, and it is well known that Mexico's export production for this year and next has already been sold," Juan Aizpuru, a spokesman for Pemex, the Mexican national oil company, said in Mexico City.

Saudi Arabia confirmed Tuesday it would not increase the price of oil before an April 1 boost already scheduled by OPEC. The OPEC base price is $13.35 a barrel.

But several other members of OPEC have taken steps to raise prices and take advantage of the supply squeeze caused by the cutoff of Iranian supply.

And Iran, which says it may soon have production back up to 3 million barrels a day, about half the pre-revolution total, said it would sell the oil to the highest bidder rather than through the consortium of companies that used to buy it.

Several nations have raised their crude oil prices 5 to 10 percent above that level, however, including Kuwait, Qatar, Venezuela, Libya and the United Arab Emirates.

In addition, the Venezuelans have added 15 percent to the price of heavy fuel oil exported primarily to the U.S. East Coast.

Mobil Corp., the nation's second largest oil company, said Tuesday it would limit gasoline sales to dealers in March to the same amounts as last year. Also in short supply is jet fuel with Trans World Airlines and National Airlines canceling dome flights Tuesday.

Gas rationing plan proposed by Carter

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration proposed a standby gasoline rationing plan Tuesday that assigns no specific amount to individuals and could be used only in an energy emergency.

The fuel conservation plan made public by the Energy Department proposes to ration gasoline by mailing gasoline allotment "checks" to owners of registered vehicles. These could then be "cashed in" for ration coupons at banks or other institutions.

The proposal is to be formally submitted Thursday to Congress, which then has 60 days to approve or disapprove it. The plan could not take effect unless the president declared a national energy emergency and won approval of its implementation by both the House and Senate.

The plan assigns no specific amounts. This determination would be made when necessary, depending on the available gasoline supply and the best current estimates of vehicle consumption.

Besides the gasoline rationing plan, the proposal includes provisions for fuel-saving actions such as restricting gasoline sales on weekends, restricting temperatures in commercial and public buildings and by restricting unnecessary advertising lighting.

Under a law passed by Congress in 1975, the president was required to submit such standby fuel conservation plans to the lawmakers.

In another development, Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger told the nation's governors that the administration is putting the finishing touches on a much less restrictive set of steps to deal with the loss of Iranian oil.

These would include steps to encourage industrial plants to switch from oil to natural gas or coal and may suspend temporarily some environmental requirements, including the one setting a refinery timetable for switching to unleaded gasoline, Schlesinger told the National Governors' Association.

Assistant Energy Secretary Harry E. Bergold, Jr., in Capitol Hill testimony, said Schlesinger and President Carter will make a decision soon on these "additional mandatory measures" related to the Iranian oil cutoff.

Before the shutdown, Iran accounted for 10 percent of the world's oil and 5 percent of the U.S. supply. About half of that has been made up by other oil producing countries.

It was after the 1973-1974 Arab oil embargo that Congress in 1975 passed a law requiring submission of gasoline rationing and other contingency plans within 180 days.

ASBYU candidates to start race

By D. PATRICK DENNY
Universe Staff Writer

the excitement of a national al party gathering comes to BYU day at 10 a.m. as the annual minations Convention kicks off the ASBYU electoral campaign.

convention begins the procedure ting next year's executive coun- mbers, a process which includes imary vote on March 6 and 7 and al elections on March 15 and 16.

l Brown, elections committee man, said he hopes for a big stu- turnout at the convention, calling ent "a noisy affair." Even if one tnessed the frivolity of a national ential assembly, Brown said, 's nothing quite like a BYU con- n."

ursday's gathering in the ELWC om will follow the procedure set vious nominations conventions, the exception that no keynote er will be presented. Said Brown, vant to nominate candidates, not a lecture series."

convention chairman will aize anyone wishing to make a nination, Brown said. A seconding n from the floor must follow to make a declaration of candidacy official. Candidates will then be allowed to make a one minute acceptance speech.

Although candidates will be allowed to place posters in public areas on campus during a two-hour period Wednesday night, campaigning begins officially following the close of the nominations assembly and will continue through the primary elections.

Campaign methods will be closely monitored this year, Brown said. The Elections Committee will handle all complaints concerning campaign violations that come to its office and those that cannot be resolved at the committee level will be referred to the student defender's offices.

"Anything we can solve here in our office would be to the advantage of the candidate in question," Brown said. "Going to court over a too-big poster or some other violation suspends his campaign for at least the day he's in court."

All candidates must file with the Election Committee, 111 ELWC, by submitting an information sheet to the office by noon today. Brown said the committee will accept late applications under special conditions until 5 p.m. Thursday, but all aspirants must be nominated at the convention in order to have their names placed on the primary ballot. As of Tuesday, seven presidential-vice presidential teams had submitted their files, but only two teams had announced their intentions in each of the races for the academics, social and organizations office positions."It's not too late to start a campaign," said Brown. The Elections Committee is soliciting student help for all election duties, from scheduling rooms to manning the ballot boxes.

Brown and ASBYU President Perry Bratt said they have high expectations for this year's electoral campaign. Recently passed election bylaws allow more freedom of expression than ever before, they said. "Almost anything goes, if the candidates have prior permission from us," Brown said. Marching bands and parades, for example, are allowed, but the use of trucks and cars on campus grounds and stereo sound systems in unauthorized areas will not be allowed.

According to Brown, several requests from candidates to use parachutists and hang gliders for publicity were denied by the FFA, the EPA and the City of Provo.

Bratt, citing last year's ASBYU voter turnout of 22 percent, said the figure is higher than that of other universities. "At the University of Utah last year, only 6 to 8 percent of the studentbody voted at election time," he said. "Students who complain that ASBYU isn't doing anything need to take advantage of the system here."

"We have over 600 workers in student government, 182 clubs and many other programs and organizations," Bratt said. "The only 'apathy' is that of students not taking the responsibility of making these activities work."

Lawsuit sought on county lease

By KIM HANSEN
Universe Staff Writer

Utah County Commissioner Jerry Bradshaw asked the county attorney's office Tuesday to file a lawsuit restraining further payments on a $1 million land lease agreement with Municipal Funding, a Colorado corporation.

JERRY BRADSHAW

According to a handwritten news release from Bradshaw, the agreement "should have gone before the voters in a bond election."

Guy Burningham, deputy county attorney, civil division, said his office received a four-page document from Bradshaw requesting action on what is believed to be an illegal act by a previous county commission. Burningham said, "We will begin an investigation immediately and, if necessary, take legal action."

Burningham said approximately two years ago, the county made a lease agreement with Municipal Funding concerning two parcels of county land. The land was originally to be used in a county-wide solid waste disposal project.

"The project soured," Burningham said, "and the county decided not to go through with it." He said in order to avoid a lawsuit, the county negotiated a long term lease with the Colorado firm with the option to pull out of the lease at the end of any given year.

The legal question Bradshaw is raising, according to Burningham, is whether the lease agreement violates bonding regulations.

In addition, Bradshaw is asking the county attorney's office to investigate violations of the open meeting or "sunshine" laws. Those laws require an agenda of a public meeting to be published or displayed 24 hours in advance of the meeting.

Bradshaw claims the other two commissioners have "discussed and passed orders on major issues not on the agenda and especially when I am out of town on official business or away from the board."

Fellow Commissioner Ken Pinegar dismissed the charges, saying "we have obeyed the sunshine laws to the letter ever since they came into being."

Pinegar said sometimes Bradshaw doesn't attend meetings when he says he will. "I really wish the attorney's office would investigate this and find out where Commissioner Bradshaw has been on his so-called 'offical business'," he said.

Bradshaw is also asking the county attorney's office to bring about "a consistency of financial matters which should be brought before the board of county commissioners."

He said a lease was recently given and a $100,000 government contract signed without official action by the board, which vilates state law.

"Most of us make mistakes from time to time," Bradshaw said. "Because of the consistency of these violations by the other commissioners, it appears there is a real disdain for any controls on the actions of the commissioners."

Pinegar said what is needed most is better communication between Bradshaw and the rest of the commission.

Mail a cricket to your mother

By JOHN JACKSON
Universe Staff Writer

There are at least five things the U.S. Postal Service has in common with a zoo — like alligators, ducks, crickets, turtles and chameleons.

That's right, letters and postcards are not the only things passing through the mail; some of the items which enter the post office can turn it into a zoo.

Blaine W. Hess, director of mail processing at the Provo Post Office, remembers the time a box of turtles broke loose and crawled all over the workroom.

Hess's boss, Postmaster Robert Strong, did him one better, recalling the time a box of chameleons got loose on the counter. "You ever see a chameleon jump on you?" Strong asks.

Strong said the clerks finally rounded up the elusive, color-reflective reptiles.

Honeybees are a common visitor at local post offices. They come in a flat cardboard box. A few free riders always find a hole to escape through, but they stay with the box because the queen is inside.

"We're not about to find out where the hole is," Strong said.

Bonnie Kay, postmaster at Santaquin, said they had some bad smelling cheese pass through. "We had to close it up in the restroom so we wouldn't be bothered by it," she said.

She also remembers the time 24 baby chickens came through. Because of a misunderstanding about the delivery date, the chicken farmer was out of town the week they arrived. So the post office took care of the chicks for a week, with postal employees bringing in food.

Unfortunately, all but six died. "They were a special breed," Mrs. Kay said. "Apparently it wasn't warm enough in the room to keep them alive."

After a week, a farmer with a brooder came in and volunteered to take care of the remaining chicks until the owner returned to town.

Mardi Gras alive despite strike

NEW ORLEANS AP — One of the smallest crowds in years celebrated Mardi Gras in the French Quarter on Tuesday, as a 12-day-old police strike that stripped the holiday of its elaborate parades sent thousands of revelers into the suburbs.

While some revelers held a mock jazz funeral for Mardi Gras in front of St. Louis Cathedral, National Guardsmen and state police, many of them seeing the holiday for the first time, patrolled the area in the absence of the striking city officers.

Things got off to a slow start. But by the time the Olympia Brass Band worked its way through the crowd to the cathedral, Mardi Gras was definitely alive and swinging.

Begin schedules talk with Carter

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter said Tuesday that Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin has decided to come here for "a frank discussion of all the issues" in the stalled peace treaty talks.

Carter told a news conference that after he sees Begin, who is due here Thursday evening, he will consider asking Egyptian President Anwar Sadat or Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil here as well.

The announcement followed Begin's refusal to attend a Camp David summit with Carter and Khalil. The Israeli Cabinet turned down that invitation on a 14-2 vote.

Carter said he talked by telephone after the Cabinet action with both Begin and Sadat. He stressed the importance of completing a treaty and that he hoped his talks with Begin would lead to an early resumption of negotiations.

Earlier, an Israeli official said Begin refused to attend the talks because Sadat decided not to participate and Egypt had hardened its bargaining position.

Carter expressed regret about the Israeli Cabinet decision. He said he was concerned about the impact on peace prospects.

At the same time, Carter said Egyptian and Israeli delegations meeting at Camp David last week with Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance had demonstrated they shared the view that wrapping up a treaty was an urgent necessity.

The original arrangement for the negotiations at Camp David called Khalil to deal with the details, Naftali Lavi, an adviser to Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, told The Associated Press.

However, Lavi said, the intention was for Sadat to be at the Maryland mountain retreat prepared to initial treaty terms if compromises could be struck on the Palestinians and other issues.

But as U.S., Egyptian and Israeli officials discussed the arrangements last week at Camp David, Sadat's participation became increasingly doubtful, Lavi said.

In Israel's earlier refusal of a Mideast summit, several Israeli ministers were reported unhappy that Sadat picked Khalil to negotiate for him, but no mention of that was in the Cabinet statement read by a somber-faced Begin.

Begin later said the Sadat-Khalil controversy was "an issue" but not the decisive factor in the Cabinet decision. "I would forego this issue of prestige for the sake of peace," he said.

The Cabinet statement said five days of ministerial-level talks at Camp David last week produced "no progress" and that Khalil made new proposals that "nullify the meaning of a peace treaty."

Insiders said Begin argued at the six-hour Cabinet meeting that the Egyptian stand made a summit pointless. They said that only Dayan and Defense Minister Ezer Weizman favored the invitation. Fourteen members, including Begin, voted against it.

"It is now evident to the Cabinet that in those talks no progress was made ...," Begin said, in reading the earlier statement. "On the contrary a more extreme position was presented by the Egyptian delegation."

But in a later meeting with Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, R-Conn., Begin said, "There will be a next step. Believe me, there will be peace."

Begin said the new Egyptian proposals contradicted the Camp David accords of last September, the result of the first Carter-Begin-Sadat summit, which outlined the peace treaty and a plan for Palestinian autonomy.

Khalil denied Egypt had toughened its stand.

Court grants petition

Tiana Fatutalie's petition was granted by the ASBYU supreme court Monday when the judges came to a 3-1 decision allowing her to run for office in this year's elections.

ASBYU Attorney General Suzanne Van Leishout said Miss Fatutalie, a junior in political science from El Toro, Calif., was ineligible to run because she did not attend BYU fall semester, as required by the ASBYU constitution.

Miss Fatutalie said she was given the go ahead to run by Michael Whitaker, an Executive Council adviser. Whitaker said the mistake was made by his referring to an outdated constitution, which ruled Miss Fatutalie eligible.

The court's decision, said Associate Justice John Chaffin, was based upon equity, not law.

Self-awarded pay hikes prohibited

By WENDY OGATA
Universe Staff Writer

The Utah House of Representatives Tuesday unanimously voted to prohibit elected city and county officials from giving themselves pay increases while in office.

Provisions in the bill sponsored by Rep. Joe E. Whitesides, R-Salt Lake, allow the officials to approve pay increases which would only take effect following a general election for their office.

In other business, the House approved a bill which lowers the minimum age of required school attendance from 18 to 17 years of age. The bill barely passed by a 38-34 vote.

The sponsor of the bill, Rep. David R. Irvine, R-Bountiful, said the state spends millions of dollars to keep some students in schools. He said that for some students, schools are becoming day care centers instead of learning centers.

Opponents of the bill argued that 17-year-olds may not be old enough to realize the importance of an education and may later regret dropping out of school.

Both House bills have been sent to the Senate for approval.

The Senate Tuesday gave preliminary approval, 27-0, to a resolution which would amend the state constitution to allow convicts to work and be paid the prevailing minimum wage during imprisonment.

Other provisions in the resolution sponsored by Sen. William N. Jones, R-Alpine, amends the constitution to allow women to work in underground mines.

Jones said the resolution, if passed, would benefit free enterprise, society and the convict.

Because they will be paid the minimum wage, the convicts can help support their families, make restitution for crimes or build up savings, the senator said.

"With only $25 in their pockets, released convicts now have a hard time getting back into society," he said.

Sen. Kay S. Cornaby, R-Salt Lake, said he concured wholeheartedly with the resolution. Present law laid down in the state constitution is "clearly unconstitutional," he said. "This is an attempt to correct that infirmity."

In an impassioned speech before the Senate, Sen. E. Verl Asay, R-Taylorsville, said a great percentage of those released from prison return there because they lose the stability and security they have in prison because they don't have a job to go to. "It's a necessary part of man's nature to work and support his family," he said.

In other business, the Senate passed two bills which among other things, tightens the state liquor commission's control over the sale of liquor in private, non-profit clubs, sets limitations on the allowable distance between churches and liquor stores and prohibits the drinking of liquor in vehicles.

Charity brings greatest joy

CECIL CARROLL
Universe Staff Writer

The greatest depth of ...in this life comes ... the principle of ...irity, said Elder ...ghn J. Featherstone ...e First Quorum of ...Seventy to BYU stu...ts at Tuesday's ...itional.

...lder Featherstone ...ed from the 13th ...apter of First ...nthians, which says, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal ... charity suffereth long and is kind ... charity never faileth."

Elder Featherstone said many study the scriptures and commit them to memory. They can quote scriptures, expound doctrine and do many great things, yet application is far more important than knowledge.

Leaders in the church are committing an "offense if they do not get down to reach the people," he said, adding that service is an essential part of charity.

Elder Featherstone said it is time "men, women and a church of charity stood up against perversion of all kinds."

He said charity does not include condoning homosexuality. "Perversion is perversion," he said, adding that the homosexual cannot receive exaltation and "can't be saved in his sins." However, he said, the church reaches out and will help him to change.

Elder Featherstone said it is a sign of immaturity when BYU coeds get engaged several times and brag about it. Others are morally clean before their engagement but "sometimes take license during the engagement."

He said we should present a "true pattern and model for the modern-day man of Christ" in all our actions since our "conduct as an institution will reflect upon the church."

"It is obvious the city commission is prepared to accept the recommendation of the committee," Provo Mayor James E. Ferguson said. "In it is included the rejection of the suggestion to refuse the money, that is why we want the minority report."

"The committee suggests that those wanting to return the funds direct their concern to their congressional delegation," Gamette said.

"The suggestions which the committee felt were important, but were ineligible, have been forwarded to the appropriate department heads," Gamette said.

The committee in making their recommendations also outlined future programs for the use of CDBG funds during the next two years. "Citizen participation in the following years will not be as extensive though," Ron Madsen, CDBG program director said.

"The main concerns of the committee are waterline replacement and economic and commercial development in Provo," Madsen said.

Orem residents demand city aid

By JOHN JACKSON

An irate group of homeowners interrupted the Orem City Council meeting Tuesday demanding more attention for the roads in their area.

Orem Mayor James E. Mangum denied the group a voice at the meeting saying they were not on the agenda. However, a petition they presented was accepted.

The homeowners were from the Executive Estates development in north Orem.

"The streets disintegrated after the first few months," said spokesman Ron Curtis, 1915 N. 90 West, after the meeting. The development was opened in 1976, Curtis said.

"It's beyond a joke," Curtis said, adding that only short-term improvements have been made.

Curtis said the homeowners have made numerous contacts with the city about getting the roads fixed, but the city has shifted the blame onto the developer. "The city has given us the outlook it isn't their problem," he said.

Curtis said individuals have tried to get on the city council meeting agenda in the past and been denied. He said they hope to get on the agenda next week.

Mayor Mangum denied that the group has tried to get on the city council meeting agenda, "at least not through me they haven't," he said.

Mangum said he had no idea who the group represented when they came into the meeting.

When told who they were, the only past contact with them he remembered having was several months ago when he said he told them the problem was outside of the city's hands since the developer had assumed responsibility.

Unwrapped bananas and coconuts occasionally pass through post offices. Pleasant Grove Postmaster Stan West remembers the office once had a five dollar bill arrive from out of state. The unwrapped money had the address and a stamp attached on a small piece of paper.

Some things are put in the post office but never get sent, such as the night depository bag with tithing receipts. An LDS bishop in Spanish Fork accidently dropped it in a letter box one Sunday night. "He called about midnight to see if I wouldn't come get it out," Postmaster J. Austin Cope, Jr., said.

Sometimes letters never get sent. Cope said he once got a call asking about a letter written 50 years ago — but postmarked in Spanish Fork only three days prior to its arrival. It was a receipt for membership in the Grand Army of the Revolution. The letter had evidently been misplaced in the office.

It arrived at the Chicago address that had been written on the envelope 50 years earlier — and the people were still living there.

Fred Roberts stretches to keep CSU's Rudy Watley contained. Roberts is usually given the assignment of guarding the opposition's best offensive forward.

Player of week

'Boo' receives honor

Freshman forward Fred Roberts was named Western Athletic Conference Basketball Player of the Week Tuesday for his play against Wyoming and Colorado State.

Roberts, known to Cougar fans as "Boo," scored 26 points against Wyoming and 27 against Colorado State, helping the Cougars to remain atop the WAC standings with only one week left in the regular season. The victory assured BYU a tie for the WAC title and a chance to win the championship outright. If the Cougars can defeat San Diego State Thursday night they will win their first league title in seven years.

"We don't want to have to wait around until Saturday to see which direction this thing is going to go," Cougar coach Frank Arnold said. "We plan on going out there on Thursday night with the idea of putting it away with our own initiative."

Roberts will be counted on heavily to help the Cougars to their victory. Danny Ainge is still questionable for the SDSU game. It is estimated the partial tear to a ligament in the right knee will take seven to 10 days to heal and Ainge won't play unless he receives an okay from the team surgeon.

"Boo" has had four good games in a row now and faced with the possibility of Ainge not playing, the Cougars will need his streak extended one more game. Roberts has led the Cougars in scoring five times this year and tied once for high scoring honors with Devin Durrant.

He is averaging 14.2 points a game, a figure good enough to put him into second place behind Ainge. He also averages 6.7 rebounds a game.

The 6-9 forward also has 23 blocked shots to his credit, along with 53 assists and 23 steals. And he's done all this averaging only 30.4 minutes a game.

Roberts should feel at home on the Cougars' trip to Southern California. San Diego is a familiar city to Roberts. He attended the San Diego Superstar camp a year ago and won the one-on-one championship for centers. In fact, all three of the Cougar freshmen forwards were at the camp.

In earning the honor of WAC player of the week, Roberts scored a total of 53 points and 14 rebounds in his two games. He beat out San Diego State's Steve Malovic, Danny Vranes of Utah, Charles Bradley of Wyoming, New Mexico forward Paul Roby, Colorado State forward Rudy Watley, and Earl Fuller of Texas — El Paso for the distinction.

The Cougars may enjoy the home court advantage Thursday night. The San Diego chapter of the Cougar club has sold 4,300 tickets to BYU fans in Southern California, a number greater than the average attendance at Aztec basketball games.

Icecats to face Utah after weekend victory

Riding high off a victory over Utah Saturday night, the BYU ice hockey team will meet the Utes tonight in a doubleheader at the Salt Palace.

The BYU-Utah match will follow the Salt Lake City Golden Eagles game against Kansas City.

The Cougars downed Utah Saturday on the efforts of Rick Bracha. Bracha put forth his best effort of the season, scoring four goals to help defeat Utah 7-3.

The Cougar victory broke a three game losing streak, and improved their overall record to 10-11-1. BYU is now insured of at least a tie for the regular season championship in the Rocky Mountain Hockey League.

The Cougars ended the regular season with an 8-2 league record. Northern Colorado's record stands at 7-2, with one game to play.

Tonight's contest against Utah will begin at 9:45 at the Salt Palace.

Indiana St. tops AP basketball poll

NEW YORK (AP) — Indiana State, having completed its first undefeated regular season, regained the No. 1 spot in The Associated Press college basketball poll Tuesday, easily outdistancing runnerup Notre Dame.

The Sycamores, 26-0, and ranked second last week, collected 51 of 61 first-place ballots and 1,192 points in balloting by a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters. Indiana State, which beat Drake 76-68 last Tuesday night and crushed Wichita State 109-84 in its first appearance on national television Sunday, was named on all the ballots although the Sycamores were ranked as low as seventh by one voter.

The Irish, ranked third last week, received seven first-place votes and 1,150 points.

UCLA, top-ranked last week but upset by Washington 69-68 Thursday night and extended to triple overtime in a 110-102 victory over Washington State Saturday, collected two first-place votes and 1,060 points while slipping to No. 3.

The remainder of last week's Top 10 engaged in a game of musical chairs.

Michigan State, No. 7 last week, jumped to No. 4 with the remaining first-place vote and 988 points. The Spartans posted victories over Big Ten Conference rivals Purdue and Illinois last week.

Gunn leads cats to overtime win

By CHUCK GATES
Universe Sports Writer

What a difference five minutes can make.

Cougar coach Courtney Leishman and his girls were all smiles as they left the court. At the other end stood a dejected coach Dan Ayala and his fifth ranked Nevada-Las Vegas team following their 103-101 overtime loss to BYU.

Just five minutes earlier both teams were deadlocked at 79 at the end of regulation play sending the game into overtime, an overtime that saw the Cougars outscore the Rebels 14-5 to take the hard fought non-conference victory.

The final score wasn't the whole story of the game. In fact, last night's game was a combination of smaller stories:

The battle of two Tina's, BYU's Tina Gunn and UNLV's Tina Glover

Five Rebel players, including four starters fouled out of the game.

BYU's 84 percent shooting from the free throw line hitting on 37-44 attempts.

The avenging an earlier 98-90 loss to UNLV in Las Vegas last month.

The shootout would be the best description of the Gunn-Glover match-up. A less likely pair would be hard to find, Gunn standing a towering 6-5 and Glover a mere 5-4.

Glover was a one girl gang in the first half, hitting 10 of 13 shots from the floor and accounting for 20 of her team's 48 first half points. Glover cooled down in the second half, hitting for only 6-22 attempts. Three of those six shots, however, came in the closing minutes of regulation and the overtime giving her 32 points and keeping UNLV in the contest when the rest of their offense went cold.

Gunn's effort weren't anything new, instead her 43 points were just a continuation of last month's record setting 56 point performance in a 98-90 loss to the Rebels. Leishman, commenting on Gunn's contribution said, "You just expect that from Tina."

Gunn's efforts were critical in the outcome of the game, particularly in the closing minutes of regulation play when she scored eight straight BYU points to pull the Cougars from an 81-74 deficit at the 7:07 mark to an 82-81 lead with 4:54 left to play. Gunn's overtime efforts were equally important, scoring six points.

"Basketball isn't designed to be played like that," gasped Leishman when commenting on the roughness of the contest. The roughness also showed in the foul and freethrowing departments. Rebel players Anita Carter, Teresa Willis, Sandra Hamilton, Paula Odnoha and reserve Kathie Calloway all had to watch the last moments of the game from the bench after fouling out. The foul line was BYU's biggest point producer during a three minute stretch in the second half, accounting for eight of 10 points when the Cougars were battling just to stay close.

"I thought the girls put forth an excellent effort," said Leishman of his team's play. Adding, "You've got to be pleased when you beat a team of that caliber."

BYU got off to a slow start in the early going, trailing by as much as 10 points at 26-16 with a little over nine minutes to play in the half. A pair of eight point bursts late in the first half cut lead to 42-41 with 1:46 and a pair of Cherly Cady freethrows gave the Cougars their first lead of the contest 45-44 with 1:11 left to play. The second half saw the Cougars open up a three-point advantage in the opening moments only to see it turn into a seven point Rebel lead with 7:07 left to go.

Playoff game planned

DENVER (AP) — A playoff game will be scheduled next week to determine the Western Athletic Conference representative to the NCAA championships if the WAC basketball race ends in a tie between Brigham Young and Utah, WAC Commissioner Stan Bates said Tuesday.

BYU, now 9-2 in WAC play, holds a one-game lead over Utah, 8-3, with one game left for each team.

BYU will play San Diego State in San Diego on Thursday while Utah will meet the Aztecs in San Diego on Saturday. A tie for the WAC championship would occur only if BYU lost and Utah won.

In case of league co-champions, said Bates, a playoff game will be held next Tuesday at Weber State College in Ogden, Utah, to determine the conference's representative to the NCAA tournament.

Illegal tricks not limited to crooked politicians

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Tom Osborne knows of a high school football star who was once offered $10,000 cash.

But Freddy Akers of Texas can top that one, and UCLA's Terry Donahue tells an illegal recruiting story that puts them all in the shade.

"The most exorbitant illegal offer I ever heard of was $10,000 cash," said Osborne of Nebraska. "The second best, or worst, was $5,000 cash. Neither of those kids ended up going to the schools that supposedly made the offers."

Osborne and several other top college football coaches were asked to list the most bizarre illegal recruiting inducements they ever heard about. The coaches, along with more than 50 sportswriters, were in Kansas City for an NCAA-sponsored college football seminar.

"I've also heard of kids being offered cars and real estate," said Akers. "There are a lot of devious people out there. But I think some of those stories get greatly exaggerated, too."

"Donahue admits he has trouble believing what he once heard.

"I've heard a story of a prospect who reputedly got a total package worth about $30,000," said the UCLA mentor. "That included land, farm equipment, tractors and livestock. I absolutely refuse to accept the truth of that, but I know an assistant coach who'll stand up on this table and swear that it happened."

Cars, money, real estate and livestock are not the only unethical means some coaches and alumni use to lure top prospects. Dirty tricks are not limited to politics.

'Paper Chase' survives ratings

(AP) — It could be called "The Show That Nielsen Couldn't Kill."

"Paper Chase," that thoughtful, deliberate TV series about the travails of law school, has spent most of its short life dancing on the edge of a very steep cliff. Its Nielsen ratings weren't low, they were invisible. News specials drew bigger audiences.

Critics raved; viewers yawned.

Last fall, CBS scheduled "Paper Chase" on Tuesday night against "Happy Days" and "Laverne and Shirley." It was not a happy encounter for "Chase." The competition regularly placed in the bottom five.

A TV show is safe if it rates in the top 35 or so. It's on shaky ground in the 36-45 range. Worse than that, goodbye. The best showing by "Paper Chase" is a 58. You could almost hear the ax falling.

But here's where the white hat shows up. "Paper Chase" has a friend, see. Somebody up there likes it. Somebody named William Paley, the gentleman who sits as chairman of the board at CBS. He has also been called the "Father of Network Television."

He has a certain influence. And he likes to watch "Paper Chase."

"It is no secret at CBS that Mr. Paley . . . well, this is his pet project," says Robert Thompson, executive producer of the show and producer of its theatrical antecedant. "Mr. Paley's the one who put the show on the air and he's the one who's keeping it on the air.

"Let's say that if we were at any other network, we would have been gone a long time ago. We never would have gotten past the first 13 shows."

Lecture to examine religious commitment

By MAUREEN RICE
Universe Staff Writer

VIRGINIA CUTLER

The 14th Annual Virginia F. Cutler Lecture and award, sponsored by the College of Family Living, will be presented tonight at 7:30 in the Stepdown Lounge, SFLC.

This distinguished faculty award, initiated in 1964, is presented to faculty members who have made significant contributions in their fields. Recipients are selected by a faculty committee which reviews the activities and accomplishments of each faculty member and selects the one most worthy of this recognition.

Dr. Darwin Thomas, professor of Child Development and Family Relations and sociology, will receive the award and present findings from some of his current research.

Thomas's lecture, "Correlates of Religious Commitment in Mormon Families: Some Preliminary Findings and a Challenge," will examine the consequences of religious commitment. Thomas surveyed 184 families, mostly LDS, in the Salt Lake City area to analyze the parent-child religious practices. The father, mother and two adolescent children were given a self-report questionnaire. In addition, family interaction was videotaped and then used to examine parent-child interaction patterns.

"The Mormon family is really understudied ... and there is not a lot of empirical research," Thomas said. "BYU has few formal classes and not even a graduate seminar on the Mormon family." Thomas recommends greater research be undertaken on the Mormon family, particularly on parent-child relations.

Thomas received his B.A. and M.A. in CDFR from BYU and his Ph.D. in sociology from the University of Minnesota. Before coming to BYU in 1972, he was an assistant professor at Washington State University. From 1973 to 1977 he served as director of the BYU Family Research Institute. He has received research grants from the University of Minnesota, Washington State University, BYU, National Science Foundation and the National Institute of Mental Health. He has authored and co-authored more than 30 articles in professional journals and two books, "Population, Resources and the Future" and "Family Socialization and the Adolescent." A third book, "Social Psychology," will be published next fall. Thomas has also written several articles for LDS Church magazines.

alue of Chinese trade questioned

By

esterners should be ious about assum- t that Communist a will be a lucrative ket for the West t because there are a n Chinese," said a versity of Utah essor Tuesday.

here is a potential nother China market uch the same way as experienced with r China markets in past," political nce professor Dr. Morrison told the Society for Asian ies. "The old China ket never really rialized. The track d is not encourage West tends to of China as a good lier of cheap labor materials, he said. However, "China is a poor country, severely undercapitalized, and underdeveloped. It has an economy which isn't even in the 20th century. It's almost like the 19th century or even earlier."

The efficiency of Chinese labor and industry is low, even compared to other underdeveloped counrties, he said.

The Chinese still live in a sort of "hand-to-mouth" economy, he said. "Will we make enough to feed everybody? Some years they don't, and they have to go to outside the country." This takes away from money they could otherwise use to modernize and industrialize China.

Prior to the Communist takeover in 1949, the West did have a market in China. Its decline coincided with the ideological changeover in China, said Morrison, and trade with the West went through "a long period of darkness."

Now, "we have a whole range of new possibilities again. There are bright lights around the marquees saying 'China market here today,'" he said.

Political stability in China has not been established, he added. Although the current trend is toward the pragmatic, moderate side of Mao Tse-tung's philosophy, "the radical Mao is still there. There are a fairly large number of people who still think, if not highly, at least generously of the radical Mao ideals."

While Westerners tend to think of the Chinese revolution as a thing of the past, the Chinese think of it in the present tense, Morrison said. Its goal — to produce a strong, independent China which is militarily secure and will raise the quality of Chinese life — is still strong. In pursuing relations with the West, China is simply trying to protect itself from foreign domination.

Morrison said he believes China will not attempt to wipe out Taiwan's economy. "In many ways, Taiwan is a model of what China wants," he said. China also has something Taiwan desperately wants — political credibility. The two countries may eventually work out an agreement that is mutually advantageous, he said.

Commission to discuss sign changes

A public hearing to discuss proposed revisions to the Provo City sign ordinance is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. today during the Provo City Planning Commission meeting.

The revisions will deal primarily with signs and outdoor advertising. "If they try to put in more billboards, I'm going to object strongly," Barbara Smith, a member of the planning commission, said.

The changes were suggested by a committee of 14 persons broken down into three subcommittees. The subcommittees covered downtown and shopping areas, outdoor advertising, and general and industrial areas.

Mrs. Smith called for an immediate curbing of signs in Provo, saying the city has reached the saturation point in signs.

Time is enemy, says executive

Time may become the enemy at the door, a management executive said Tuesday in a lecture sponsored by the BYU School of Management.

"We have long labored under the belief that Time is kind. That given time, we can find the means and the resources to solve the problems that confront us. Time is no longer kind," said James D. Hart, executive director of Northwest Hospital, Seattle, Wash.

Hart said this lack of time will bring with it a "literal material decline." Because of this decline "the ideology of growth as a management principal will diminish. Ultimately it will be replaced by the ideology of decline and its attendant management by redistribution."

In order to keep down rising national costs, Hart said, the government will have to redistribute the resources we have instead of searching for new ones. "It is appalling that many look upon the condition of declining resources as just a passing phenomenon," Hart said. "There is a mentality in our society which seems to say, 'It's a minor problem and technology will eventually solve it.'"

Hart also discussed rising health care costs, saying that inflation of health care costs must be shown in comparison to other rising costs. Hart cited a recent survey in the Reader's Digest which showed that auto repair, home finances, gas-electricity, water-sewer and postal fees are all higher on the list of rising inflation than medical care.

Hart predicted future health care costs would "rise as fast or faster than inflation," but could be controlled if the government and public would help in the effort.

speaks German, she speaks Finnish, both speak Russian and English, and 21-month-old son, Daniel, is picking up cle of everything.

olfgang and Irene Lebedies met three s ago when Irene was teaching a Russian lass at BYU and Wolfgang showed up as f her students.

Ve were told of each other before the first ," Irene said, "by a department chair- who had high hes of getting us her. He talked to us each individually t the commendable qualities of the ."

hen the two finally met, however, their impression of each other was "yuk!." e said her initial reaction was, "You mean supposed to marry him?"

t she changed her mind after studying Wolfgang for a German experimental ation class. "I needed some help in Ger- ," Irene said, "so I decided I might as sk someone who was straight from Ger- ." When he came over to study, though, alked about everything but German. I t I learned one phrase."

er only a week of "tutoring" Irene, gang proposed to her, and made it of- by announcing to her class that he d soon be marrying the teacher.

cording to Irene, Wolfgang took the e class to the ELWC after class that day t ice cream cones. "He wanted to make sure he hadn't caused any hard feelings," she said.

Attesting to the fact that his Russian teacher showed no favoritism to her "favorite" student, Wolfgang admits he received only a "B" grade in Irene's class. Luckily, he had a teacher who was very understanding and realized he had no time that semester for studying.

"We both had more important things to do, so we never talked about Russian," Irene said.

The couple's young son, Daniel, doesn't talk about Russian either. Nor does he speak English. Irene speaks to him only in her native Finnish, and Wolfgang in his native German. Neither one of them speaks to him in English, though he picks up quite a bit from their conversations with each other.

"I can't understand what Irene says to him, and she can only understand a little of what I say, but it works out fine," Wolfgang said.

"We've read quite a bit about teaching children to talk in a family like ours, and this seems to be the best way," Irene said. She said Daniel will either be "trilingual or piglatinish. We'll just have to wait and see."

Wolfgang, who grew up in Germany and served on a mission in England, has been at BYU for three and a half years now. He expects to receive his degree in special education in two years, after which he plans to return to Germany with his family.

Irene, who was raised in Finland and came to BYU over six years ago, graduated three years ago with a Russian major, after which she returned for a teaching certificate. Now she's directing a Russian choir which meets voluntarily once a week to sing Russian songs, some of which are performed for other people.

"Anyone with an interest in the Russian language is welcomed," Irene said. "The emphasis is not so much on quality of voice, but rather a combination of the language and music."

Kunz is certainly in a position to testify to the effectiveness of the national news program. "Several times my material has been picked up by the national wire services," he said. "This type of exposure has led to close to 200 interviews on radio programs, as well as an appearance on 'To Tell The Truth.' "

Radio audience

On one occasion, a radio station in Australia called Kunz to discuss a recently published article. "After about 10 minutes of discussion on my study, the announcer said, 'Now tell us about BYU and the Mormon Church.' We then spent about 20 minutes explaining the church to an audience of several million," Kunz said.

"The whole purpose of the news service is to give better exposure to the faculty members here who are doing outstanding work, and to better the university's image," Ms. Lubeck said.

When a senior editor for Readers Digest visited campus recently, she told Ms. Lubeck, "Your professors are just as brilliant, and more humble than professors at the more widely recognized institutions. The only problem is they just aren't quite as visible."

"Editors are beginning to call here when they need a source or a comment from an expert in a given field," Ms. Lubeck said. " People nationally are beginning to recognize the quality of our faculty.

"And as they recognize the quality of our faculty, they will naturally recognize the quality of the university education offered. The implications for both the university and the church are quite exciting."

New sunshine law stops secrecy abuse

The legislature's approval of a bill to bring municipalities into compliance with the state's open meetings laws is a good thing for the people of Utah. It is needed to increase necessary public scrutiny of government operation.

The bill, sponsored by Rep. Genevieve Atwood, R-Salt Lake City, came after a suit by the Society of Professional Journalists against South Ogden in which a reporter was asked to leave a public meeting so that city officials could discuss personnel problems. The problem with the incident was not the city's right to discuss personnel matters in confidence, but the manner in which the action was taken.

Under the state's open meetings law, a public body must give at least 24 hours' notice of the agenda, date, time and place of any meeting. All meetings are to be held in public with the exception of certain exemptions such as personnel discussions, real estate purchases, deployment of security personnel and investigative proceedings regarding allegations of criminal misconduct. But even under these conditions the public officials must vote in the public meeting and receive a two-thirds majority to close the meeting.

The reason for going into executive session must be stated in the minutes and the vote of each individual member must be recorded. In the South Ogden case, many of these procedures were violated. Apparent discrepancies existed between the city's municipal regulations regarding closed sessions and the state's open meetings law. Rep. Atwood's bill will insure that all municipalities will be subject to the state open meetings requirements.

The purpose of such a law is found in the preface of the open meetings act which says, the "state, its agencies and political subdivisions exist to aid in the conduct of the people's business." It is the intent of the law that government actions be taken openly and that deliberations be conducted openly.

No one will deny that public bodies need to have some amount of confidentiality in their deliberations. An employee's personal difficulties, if aired in the press under any circumstance, could do considerable damage to his personal life. Public real estate ventures, if exposed prematurely, could lead to speculation on the market and inflated land prices.

On the other hand, government has too often abused its power under the cloak of "protecting the public interest." Too often the closed door sessions have been an attempt to increase governmental power and have been a detriment to the public interest. The Watergate scandal and Salt Lake City's recent citygate illustrate the need for the public to carefully monitor the actions of elected officials. The recent action by the legislature is a good compromise in providing for governmental prudence while preventing the abuse of power which so often exists in local and national politics.

Sherlock Holmes

Case of the Mysterious Inflator

Not long ago, Sherlock Holmes and his confidant Watson were called in by the White House to look into the Case of the Mysterious Inflator.

As the investigation progressed, the duo determined that the caretaker (government) and the gardener (workers) both had significant roles in the murder of the American economy.

"But wait," said Holmes, "I have another suspect."

"I thought the case was wrapped up," replied Watson.

"By no means, Watson. Productivity has been acting very strange since our investigation began."

"Strange?"

"Indeed. Last year, consumer prices rose a ghastly 9 percent and productivity less than 0.5 percent. I've traced the trend of high inflation and relatively low productivity back to the early '70s. Before that time, rises in productivity averaged a full 3 percent each year, and the inflation rate wasn't much higher. There seems to be no sign of improvement; indeed the situation may worsen."

"Preposterous. How can such a minor factor influence such a large and complex economy?"

"Elementary, my dear Watson. When workers are more productive, total output is increased per worker. Thus, employers can afford to give wage increases without a corresponding rise in prices. This means less inflation and a higher standard of living."

"Very well. But does it not seem strange that a country known for unmatched technology and the most modern industrial equipment in centuries has problems with low productivity?"

"On the surface it does, Watson, but there are subtle factors which more than manage to offset the spage-age equipment."

"Such as, Holmes?"

"Such as less spending for research and development. Granted, the Vietnam War and less emphasis on the space program has contributed to some degree, but inflationary conditions are the major reason. Research and development spending is down 30 percent, and private universities are especially feeling the pinch."

"Are other investments involved?"

"Considerably. The investment ratio for new machinery, for instance, is down 40 percent since 1973. Fearing recession and inflation, industry is less than eager to purchase newer, more efficient equipment. Related areas are affected as well."

"How much does the government have to do with all this?"

"More than one might realize, Watson. The mass of government regulations have forced businesses to spend more and more to assure compliance. This is money that could be spent on better and more efficient methods of production."

"Does this mean we should do away with pollution standards, for instance? That would be pure insanity."

"Yes it would. The standards should be maintained, but industry should be allowed to determine how to best meet those regulations rather than having to install costly government-directed anti-pollution equipment."

"So you really think production is a significant factor in the high inflation rate, Holmes. How shall we go about solving the dilemma?"

"The most obvious starting place, Watson, is to lessen the grip of government regulation. Then, tax programs should be revamped to encourage investment and tax credits given for R and D spending. Workers should also be more reasonable in their wage demands for the next little while. Unless something is done, and done quickly, this case may never be solved."

The curious figure of Holmes was spotted leaving the fog-shrouded Capitol grounds, where his solutions were turned down or tabled by Congressionaal committees.

The Case of the Mysterious Inflator remains largely unsolved.

Renters nee protection

Almost everyone who has rente any length of time probably has s not-so-fond memories of dishonest dlords. One particular area o abused is the deposit required "cleaning or damages."

After staying up late at night cl ing an apartment prior to mov some people receive a check from landlord with less than the w amount and no explanation.

At last there may be some pa protection for the renter. A bill s sored by Rep. Kevin Watt, R- Lake City, which passed the U House Monday will require landl to explain in the contract what tion, if any, of a deposit is refundable. It will also require the explain in writing why any part o deposit was retained. Although t were some in the House who bel that renters "should not have e rights," fortunately cooler h prevailed. Although the bill somewhat watered-down versio what was originally proposed, it st better than no protection at all an step in the right direction.

Rep. Lee Farnsworth, R-Provo, plained that when he helped daughter move into an apartment had to clean the apartment upon r ing in and when they left, and st portion of the deposit was retaine

The bill has passed the House must still come before the Senate. dents who rent would be wise to their state senators to push for passage of the bill. It's past time equal protection be guaranteed fo tenant as well as the landlord.

It's Hatch who lacks

Editor:

I would like to suggest that perhaps Senator Hatch does not owe BYU an apology for saying that he did not receive an academic education at BYU, but rather that the university owes the senator an apology for not giving him the academic education which he so obviously lacks.

After all, his speeches and actions clearly demonstrate that he is lacking in the enlarged world view which is generally associated with a well-rounded academic education.

Abortion invades privacy

Editor:

The editorial on abortion in Friday's Universe stated that the bill passed by the Utah House of Representatives requiring a woman to see "graphic material" (photographs of aborted infants) 24 hours before her decision on having an abortion is "an invasion of privacy and the height of sensationalism."

Fetal removal is an incomparably greater invasion of privacy — depriving anyone of life is the ultimate invasion of privacy.

The editorial further states that such "vivid portrayals of aborted infants ... would merely induce and increase more and more guilt."

Feeling guilt for taking another's life is not inappropriate. Like it or not, such vivid portrayals of aborted infants will be seen and guilt will be felt, if not now, later.

The editorial concludes that the best solution would be for the state to incorporate a system of educational programs and counseling which would help "potential mothers decide the best alternatives for them ..."

"Best alternative" implies a choice which is simply this: let the child live or have the child die. Just as it is unconscionable to let a father choose between life and death for his neonate, so should it be equally unconscionable for a mother to have societal approval in making a similar decision regarding her unborn child.

I must confess that my strong feelings came from my observance of the birth of my child almost two years ago. At the moment of his delivery, for some inexplicable reason, I was overwhelmed and even frightened by the thought that the day before his last trimester my wife and I could have had him aborted — and we would have been blameless before the law.

On or off religious grounds, abortion is wrong. Every person of good conscience must reject all arguments which implicitly or explicity support abortion.

Oldtime cheerleader

Editor:

We would like to take this opportunity to thank the gentleman who sits beside the east basket on the fourth row for his fine support of our basketball team. Also for helping us students in our cheering. Since we are not supposed to get on referees' backs, we can always count on him to voice our opinion for us, even though he may be a little out of place at times. If all the other, as Coach Arnold calls them, "Old Duffers" had as much enthusiasm as him, we could raise the roof of the Marriott Center with cheering. We'll need it when our Cougars come back in March for the Regional Playoffs.

Keep up the good work sir.

Word indicates mentality

Editor:

I was in the Bookstore last Friday to buy some batteries. When I got to the stairs, I found them closed because they were doing inventory downstairs. I asked the employee standing there holding a rope if there was any way to get some batteries. He said, "No! It's closed." I accepted this, and was about to leave when another man came up and asked if there was any way he could get anything from the first floor. He was told the same thing I was, except, he took it further. He asked why the inventory couldn't be done after hours. He was told that it would never get done. The man said that it was pretty stupid to close off that whole floor during business hours, and walked away.

The employee then did something I would never expect a Bookstore employee to do. He turned to the man, who was then about 20 feet away, and said not too quietly, "Nigger!" This proved that the mentality of the employee was not very high.

I did not expect this at a school like BYU. It was totally uncalled for, and I hope this letter will spark someone's interest to change the situation.

Tax break unnoticed

Editor:

Many graduate students may be interested in the fact that certain grants and scholarships are excludable from taxable income. IRS publication 520 and section 117 of the IRS code explain the law and define grants and scholarships.

In publication 520, a grant generally means an amount paid or allowed to, or for the benefit of, individuals to aid them in the pursuit of study or research." Other conditions that must be satisfied include: the taxpayer is a candidate for a degree at an educational organization; the candidate performs research, teaching, or other services for the organization that satisfies the existing specifically stated requirements for the degree; and all candidates for the degree are required to perform equivalent services.

The existence of a qualifying grant may be established in several ways. Publications 520 suggested contacting the grantor or the IRS directly. It is possible at this institution that certain administrators will not be cooperative, or may even be antagonistic, in helping the student to establish the existence of a grant. If this is the case, a direct appeal to the IRS may be in order.

Copies of publication 520 are available at the local office of the IRS. This letter is not an attempt to give tax advice, but is intended to inform students concerning this publication and section 117 of the IRS code.

Media takes Billy over Jimmy

Most presidents are remembered for at least a few years after the end of their administration, but judging from the reportage of the national press corps, Billy Carter might be remembered far longer than his brother Jimmy.

The trend of the press has been to focus the attention of the American public on personalities and personal problems. In the past few years we have learned Billy Carter is a bigot who loves his beer; Betty Ford has suffered from alcohol-drug addiction and has undergone a face lift; Amy Carter sells lemonade and has transferred from a public to a private school; the breaking up of Chip Carter's marriage; the president had a painful case of hemorrhoids; and everything you ever wanted to know about Miss Lillian but were afraid to ask.

Whatever happened to Jimmy Carter's job of being president?

The trend started with the pure personality-peddling magazines. That was fine. But the national press climbed on the peoplewagon — first with detailed stories about Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis and about Checkers, the Nixon family dog; now they follow Billy, the Carter fa buffoon.

Reporting about the people behind the scenes m the news more personal and much more interesting fact, it is essential. But present press coverage reached an extreme. The president's comments about brother receive as much air time as his comments ab inflation or the Sino-Vietnamese war.

And what's worse, the American public has not e reacted. Instead of insisting the press reset its priorities reporting, the public seems satisfied with knowing Carter's sister was arrested for illegal harmonica play

It is to be hoped that the pendulum will swing in other direction before the coming presidential campa heats up. The public needs to be aware of what a presid tial candidate would do if elected, rather than his soft pitching ability.
